“Stanley Stewart has been a major voice in Renaissance literary studies for more than four decades. Exploring the imagery of religious verse, reexamining the categorical implications of “major” and “minor” poets and playwrights, and pioneering the use of Wittgensteinian analysis in literature, Stewart has proven to be an adamant and intelligent defender of the traditions and wisdom of humanistic study and criticism. These essays, written in his honor, employ Stewart’s methodological approaches to examine literary and philosophical texts solidly within their contexts. Contributors include: R. V. Young, Arthur F. Kinney, Robert C. Evans, Grace Ioppolo, John Mulyran, Sara van den Berg, Paul J. Voss, Richard Harp, Cyndia Susan Clegg, Scott F. Crider, Tom Clayton, and John Briggs” – Amazon.com
