Leading to Yes: How I Saw Every Challenge as an Opportunity

By Harry Le Grande
Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Emeritus
University of California, Berkeley

This is about the humble beginnings of a blue-collar kid from San Bernardino, California. How as a first-generation college student he was able to ascend from a student leader to a university executive.

Every experience was an opportunity for personal and professional growth. Imposter syndrome was not to be embraced.

He shares how opportunities presented themselves and why it's important not to shy away from the stretch ones.

It includes some self-exercises and a leadership checklist of skills and traits one should possess to achieve success in leading. (Source: Amazon.com)
